SCORE POINT 4

7 The narrators description of the characters are very good. When the narrator explains Jason Malridge you know that he is probably a good looking big shot that gets all girls. "Jason, the with the face all the girls in high school wanted to smother with kisses, was so cool." John Mancini seems to be someone who is friends with everyone looks decent but can get ticked off by anyone at any time. "Skinny, quick, and short tempered." "since Mancini had blond hair and the face of an angel." Also Louie Shortzer just from description seems mean as heck at first sight but actually is nice. "You'd think someone with a carrot-top like this would get mad at any thing. Nope, nothing riled this guy, not even when you called him by his nick name summa" Hog Burrell seems like someone who can lift 200 pounds easy because they say "This guy's upper body was so big that when he didn't wear shoulder pads under his sweater, you couldn't tell the difference." The narrator's descriptions definitely help I.O the characters.

Response provides a thorough explanation of how the narrator's descriptions help the reader understand the characters. Response includes relevant information from the passage.

SCORE POINT 3

The narrator's descriptions of the players help understand the characters in certain ways. First of all the description of Jason Mulridge "the guy with the face all the girls in high school wanted to smother with kisses, was cool" gives us the idea that his is a cool guy who gets all the girls. Next when Coach Blair asked "who won't make it," gave us the idea that he is a caring person. Last when Teddy shouted and it said "Teddy's face was red and the little veins on his nose looked like wriggle worms" it gave us the idea he is a determined man. The narrator really helped me visualize.

When the narrator is describing Hog Burnell, it made a good picture in my mind of him getting hit in the face by a hockey puck, and just grunting, then getting 5 stitches after he scores a goal. And then when he's describing John Macini, with blonde hair and a face of an angel. Then Louie Shertzer, I can just picture a big red head guy getting screamed at by the coach and not complaining.

Response provides a partial explanation of how the narrator's descriptions help the reader understand the characters. Response includes limited information from the passage.

SCORE POINT 2
(EXAMPLE B)

7 The narrator's description helps the reader to understand the characters because it tells how they look, and what their personality is like. When the narrator talked about John Mancini the reader then knows that John Mancini is skinny, quick, short tempered and a good hockey player if he's a centerman.

Training Notes:

The focus of the response should reflect the problem. A character other than McPhee may be chosen, but there must be adequate support.

The main problem is that the game is started and the narrator's team is rushed to start. This affected him because he did not have time to get nervous. It also affected him because when he got the puck he was not warmed up so he passed it to a teammate. He also said he would have tried a fancy move but he did not trust himself. In a way the narrator also did not have enough time to get his head in the game like soon of his teammates. Lastly because the team was rushed some of the starters were not ready for the game so some of the not so good players had to play. Some people might have given up but the team didn't.

Response provides a thorough explanation of the main problem in the passage and how it affects the main character. Response includes relevant information from the passage.

The main problem in the passage is that the narrator's team has no time to warmup and the players are not all ready. As the coach in the story says "We'll start the game with whoever's ready." So, the players that were ready, including the narrator, had to go and play without their other teammates. Then they weren't able to warm up. The narrator said, "I didn't even have time to build up my usual pre-game nervousness." This is almost a good thing, but they still didn't have time to warm up. The main problem all started when they didn't have enough time to get ready.

Response provides an explanation of the main problem in the passage and how it affects the main character. Response includes some relevant information from the passage.
